to the worship of the Sun God Mithras around 600 BC (see image below). The Bible teaches other celebrations that the first and last book of the Bible mentioned is the menorah. The menorah is the golden seven-armed lampstand, whose construction is described in the Bible and became associated with the Jewish identity. The menorah is a symbol of faith, power, and light, and its presence in the temple was a constant reminder of the divine presence. The menorah is made of gold and has seven branches, each representing one of the seven days of creation. It is used to illuminate the temple and is a reminder of the importance of light in the Jewish faith. The menorah is also a symbol of peace, and its presence in the temple is a testament to the Jewish commitment to peace and justice. The menorah is an important part of Jewish life and culture, and its presence in the temple is a constant reminder of the importance of the Jewish tradition and the values that it represents.
